Backstory

Yuri spent his whole childhood idolizing his father, who worked in the military, he spent his whole life wishing to be just like him, even as he got older and realized that serving his country was not what he thought of as a child. He was revered by his superiors for his quick thinking, excellent physique and flawless obedience, he never failed to perform his duties. Despite his near addiction to working and raising ranks he managed to get married and even have a kid named Mikhail. Unfortunately, after a few years of never talking to his wife she got in a car accident, Yuri was heartbroken, but he still had his son.

After this shocking event he decided he'd served his country enough, his efforts had been recognized enough and, despite being a bit young, he decided to retire and spend time with his son, he might go back to work sometime in the future. And so, years passed and he grew to love his son more than he'd ever loved his job. But once again, tragedy struck.

His son was about 6, Yuri had taken him to the forest for camping, there were plenty of people there, it was supposed to be safe. Mikhail went to a walk in the forest and never came back, Yuri spent days trying to find him,

Abilities

Superhuman Strength

He has passive super strength, many times greater than even the strongest human. He can lift many times his weight without much effort but he can lift more if he tries harder

He is very skilled at using his strength and weight to his advantage, being able to punch through concrete and cause severe damage even to armored vehicles such as tanks

With his strenght he has no trouble lifting his 1,5 ton spear.

Great agility and flexibility

Yuri has a great flexibility; the strength of his joints allows him to even dislocate many different bones without much trouble. His flexibility is on par with a professional gymnast. He is capable of jumping and climbing with great dexterity and incredible speed for someone of his size

Pain tolerance

Even if he suffers great damage, Yuri barely feels pain.

Physical resistance

Yuri's body is built to be capable of resist and absorb as much damage as possible. His skin is similar to a bulletproof vest, very good at stopping piercing damage. Small to medium caliber weapons can't even damage his skin, higher caliber weapons can damage and penetrate his muscle.

Even if the skin is pierced, his muscle is incredibly resistant as well, shaped to protect his vital organs (which he has few since his body is very optimized and compact). Yuri's bones are very resistant but also flexible enough to be very hard to break.

Despite all of the optimization he's gone through, his head still remains to be a weak point. While it may be even more bulletproof than the rest of his body, blunt damage can concuss the brain.

Improved survivability

Yuri's constitution and metabolism allow him to survive incredibly harrowing injuries which would otherwise prove fatal. He can survive extreme blood loss, organ failure, dangerous poisons (although if it's a poison unknown to modern medicine it might be more effective) and even minor brain damage.

If death is absolutely imminent his body goes into absolute shutdown and he enters a vegetative state until he is given assistance

Dark vision

can see well in darkness

Strengths

Yuri can spend a month without any food of any kind. He is usually fed intravenously with supplements of vitamins and proteins (once a week). His body is very good at healing, however since he is very large it evens out so he heals just a little faster than a normal human.

Needless to say his body is one of his greatest strengths, he can absorb great amounts of damage as well as avoid danger thanks to his mobility.

Despite being built for following orders, due to not having memory suppressants he is quite adamant about killing, and will try to avoid it or work around orders in order not to do it.

Weaknesses

Physically and mentally speaking, his head is his biggest weakness. Despite being far more bulletproof than the rest of his body, it is way more susceptible to blunt force damage, making it easy to concuss him and cause him to lose balance. However, to make him lose consciousness it'll take far more than just making him a little nauseous. To truly win against him it'd take strong damage to the joints and brain.

Despite his loyalty and determination to complete an objective, his brain is completely unprotected to mental attacks. Despite the memory suppressants, it might be possible to bring back faint memories from his past, which might confuse him enough to give you an opening and defeating him.

Currently, he is far more susceptible to defying orders just from being talked to by someone he finds likeable

Relationship with Boris

At the beginning of the tournament, Boris is just the man giving Yuri the orders, as usual. However, as he regains memories he will question Boris and he'll become a wall blocking his path to recovering his identity

Generally Yuri obeys Boris, but will do so more reluctantly as the rounds progress

ROUND 2

Yuri doesn't like Boris, he will begrudgingly follow orders, but he will act sort of like a rebellious teenager towards Boris by half-assedly following orders.

Progression during the story

During the tournament Yuri will begin recovering his memories and slightly changing his behaviour

These are all suggestions of how he will sort of behave, nothing too concrete or serious

Round 1

He will begin having faint blurry flashbacks of his past life, he might even hesitate to follow through with an order (but he will anyways). At this stage he might slightly question Boris or speak out of line (state his own opinion) but nothing too rebellious. He will not tell Boris about the flashbacks

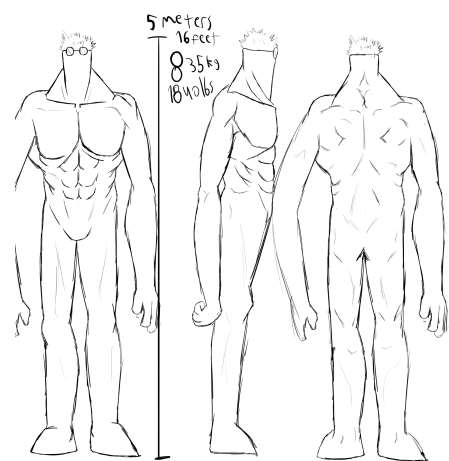

Round 2

He will have clearer visions of the past and will remember he had a son, he might even question Boris about who he was before being a soldier. At this point he might even talk back to Boris, act unpredictably or even not follow a direct order

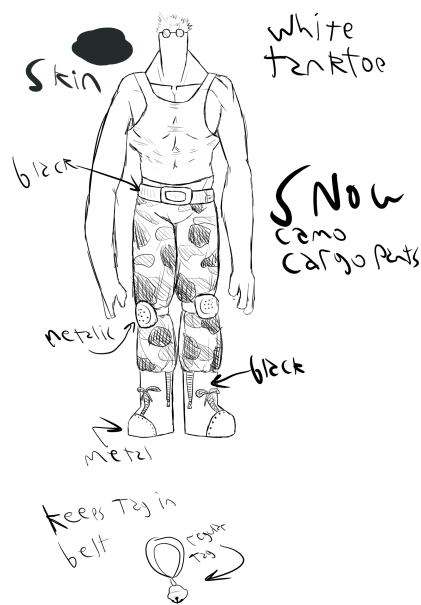

Round 3

He will fully regain his memories and question Boris about them. He will fully revel and claim that his wish upon winning will be to get his son back. Because this, he no longer follows any sort of order given and might even attack Boris (though he is not a vengeful person)

Author's Notes

I only draw in black and white, so to paint Yuri I do all those lines. You don't need to do that if you want to draw him, I do this with every character who has black coloration.

Feel free to change or alternate the colors a little, I don't really mind since I draw in black and white
